

Objective & Strategy

This certificate is linked to a basket of Swiss shares and one exchange traded instrument. This Active Dynamic Certificate is documentary evidence of a discretionary investment strategy defined by the investment advisor in the "NextGen Swiss High Dividends Equities" sphere.

The underlying is usually composed of at least 5 and up to a maximum of 30 securities (but may also have a cash component of a certain amount) from the investment universe, whereby the weighting of any security may not exceed 30 percent at the time of the investment. Short selling is not permitted. All the funds must be invested in basket components of the investment universe at all times.

Monthly Comment

In June, the Swiss High Dividends certificate registered a performance of 0.80% compared to May's 0.35%. The certificate's benchmark, the Swiss Market Index (SMI), rose by 2.17% against 2.10% in the previous month. Since the beginning of the year, the two baskets stand at -12.02% for the certificate and -5.38% for the benchmark. Since inception, cumulated performances are respectively at 9.63% and 13.33% (annualized performances of 1.64% and 2.23%) for annualized volatilities of 11.48% and 11.96%.

During the month, we add one position: Swisscom (1.54%). Other changes included a reduction of our exposure in Sulzer (-1.89%) and an increase in Novartis (+4.69%) and Roche (+4.78%). Therefore, health care companies account for 29.09% of the portfolio, followed by financials at 14.21%, industrials at 12.87% and consumer staples at 4.85%. Cash is now at 30.30%, reduced from the level of last month (around 40%). This also explains partially the lag with the market's performance this month.

Best contributors to the performance were ABB (+12.91%, +0.61% contribution), DKSH (+14.93%, +0.45% contribution) and Zurich (+7.98%, +0.32% contribution). On the other side, Roche (-1.30%, -0.19% contribution), Novartis (-0.73%, -0.10% contribution) and Landis (-3.00%, -0.04% contribution) were the main detractors.
